

HEALTH CARE ADVOCATES

Paul Buckowski / Times Union

In support of community-based providers

Barbara Crosier, vice president, government relations, for Cerebral Palsy Associations of New York State, speaks during a news conference Tuesday at the Capitol in Albany, held by advocates representing primary care, mental health, substance use disorder, developmental disability and home care provider associations. The advocates are calling for passage of legislation that would assure that 25 percent of the funds in the Health Care Transformation Fund are allocated to community-based providers.
